

Framed!

By DIVA BARGAIN SHOPPER SPECIAL TO GET STUFF

Diva has many photographer friends, who over the years have taken portraits of said Diva. Many of these photos, large in size, have found their way between the pages of large coffee table books to preserve and avoid being crumpled. While thumbing through an Annie Leibovitz book of portraits, an old photograph of moi fell out. This Diva could only dream of being among such stars. I was about to put the photo back where it would be once again forgotten, but instead I thought about how I would finally frame it.

You've seen them stacked together against the far wall at a garage sale or second-hand store - old picture frames.

And you've seen them in the store, brand-new and expensive, and maybe not exactly what you want. But more likely than not, you can find a frame that will suit your needs and the memory you want to preserve. So, onto the hunt for frames.

Measure the item to be framed before you go and think about what you'd like for the style and thickness of the frame. Then, take the leap, sort through the pile. Look for a sturdy frame without cracks or holes. Of course, you can fix most of these blemishes before you paint with wood glue and filler, but the less prep work you have to do the better. Try to get one with the hangers already on it, but again, you can always add them yourself after painting. If your item to be framed is flimsy, try to get a frame with strong backing, otherwise you'll have to find something sturdy to cut to size, to avoid warping.

Try to find a frame with glass. Buying a piece of plexi- or cut glass later is always an option; just make sure the frame is deep enough for it. You'll want to sand and clean your frame to prep the surface, followed by spray paint, and voila, perfection for your perfect photo!

Diva's friend Margo has a wall of painted frames with no photos or artwork in them at all. It's a magnificent display of found objects, all painted different colors. Your imagination does the rest!

Have you been framed? E-mail the Diva at divabargainshopper@sunsentinel.com.
