

Nautical Know-How

By DIVA BARGAIN SHOPPER
SPECIAL TO GET STUFF

On a recent antiquing trip to Melbourne Beach, my friend Rusty scored a wonderful lobster trap. It's wood is nicely aged without being too tattered, and the nets are intact inside. She has crafted it into a lovely coffee table by getting a piece of tempered glass out to fit on top of it. She placed real-looking crabs and lobsters inside, (from a great moving sale), and it's a lovely addition to her nautical screened porch.

You will also see oars with peeling brightly-colored paint hanging on her wall. These were a steal at a local flea market a few years back for $2. I suppose they still would work if you wanted to use them in your row boat, but they look charming where they are.

Also on this porch, she ingeniously used 4 molded marlins that are about 10" wide each from the dollar store. She adhered them in a row directly on the porch wall above the sliding doors. Then she painted them the same color as the house (don't forget to primer them first). It looks like an expensive custom detail.

Rusty also uses old printer's drawers to hold treasures found at the beach. If you're young, you may not know what printer drawers are - but at one time, printing was a real art and took many fine pieces to print even one simple page.

The drawers are usually in need of a good cleaning. She uses a combination of tweezers and toothpicks and other objects to remove bits of paper and lint and a damp toothbrush to get rid of dust. She then dries it in the sun for a day. Next, she selects which shells, and beach treasures she wants to display. After gluing everything in its place, she takes the outside measurements and gets a fitted piece of plexiglass to protect her treasures. Rusty finds printer drawers at yard sales, flea markets, from the newspaper want ads and online auctions, too.

Keep an eye out at architectural salvage stores for other boat items, such as lanterns, mooring cleats (can be used as cool handles on furniture or doors), ship wheels, even a carved figurehead from the prow of a sailing ship.

Marine decorations are as popular as ever. Just look at a home furnishings catalogue or web site. Check out web stores such as www.nauticalseasons.com, www.anythingnautical.com and www.beachandnature.com.
